

700-Student Education Support Program

Event Summary

For a long time, our team worked toward this day — collecting information about students in need, speaking with their families, understanding their situations, and looking for a way to support as many young people as possible.

When the day finally arrived, it brought both joy and heartbreak. Parents came with their children carrying high hopes, after struggling for a long time just to keep them in school. For many of these students, this support meant they could finally take the next step in their education.

There were also difficult moments. Some students were overcome with emotion, and a few even went down on their knees asking for help. The need in the room was greater than what we had to give, and seeing students in tears because their needs weren't fully met was one of the hardest parts of the day.

Rather than fully supporting only a handful of students, our team made the decision to stretch what we had so that every single one of the 700 students received some form of educational support.

How the Students Were Chosen

The students came from different backgrounds and different parts of the country. What they had in common was genuine educational need and families facing real financial struggle to keep them in school.

We have been — and still are — collecting detailed information on each student: who they are, where they come from, what they're studying, and where they'll continue their education. This isn't always easy; some students live in remote areas with poor communication networks, so it can take time to reach families and gather accurate information. We keep following up because we want complete, honest records for every one of the 700 students.

What This Means Going Forward

The work doesn't end with one event. We're continuing to document each student's story and track their progress as they move forward in school. Photos and videos from the day are being organized to help tell this story — the students, the parents, the leaders, and the partners who made it possible.

Our Partners in This Work

This effort has been made possible through the partnership of Gloha SACCO (the mother organization of Gloha Family Welfare), Project Restore Hope, churches, and everyday individual supporters who believe every child deserves a chance at education. We're especially grateful for the leadership of Bishop Dr. Bonface Mang'eti, whose personal commitment, time, and sacrifice has helped keep this work moving forward.

Why We're Sharing This

Seven hundred young people received support and had people stand with them at a critical point in their education — and that's something to celebrate. But it's also a reminder: there are still many more students out there who need help, families who are struggling, and orphans and vulnerable children in our communities who deserve the same chance.

If you'd like to join us in supporting these students and reaching even more, we'd love to have you as part of this journey.

Education is the key to a better tomorrow.
